THE BIGGEST VOTE! A NEW LEADER!

Miss Franks First--Miss Davis and Mrs. Duvall Equal in Strength.

END OF CONTEST DRAWING NEAR!

As the end of the Press Popularity Contest draws near, the interest increases. Everything indicates that the fight will be a close one and that up to the hour of four o'clock on December 24th, the time appointed for the contest to close, it will be impossible to pick the winner. The leaders change almost weekly.

The biggest vote cast since the contest was inaugurated was polled this week, one hundred and eight ballots were deposited in the ballot box by subscribers old and new.

Miss Maggie Franks, the popular school teacher, seemed to be the favorite with the voters this week. She is first in the race, last week she was third in strength. Miss Davis and Mrs. Duvall are equal again this week. They are only a few votes behind Miss Franks. Miss Summers, Mrs. Flannery, and Miss Belmont made big gains.

There are now sixteen contestants and the majority have friends who are working hard.

The end of the contest is but three weeks off. On Wednesday December 17th, the ballots will be counted for the current week and then the keys to the box will be given to two prominent citizens. At four o'clock in the afternoon, Wednesday December 24th, the contest will close, the ballot box turned over to a committee composed of five well known gentlemen, who will make the final count. On Christmas day the costly suit of dining room furniture offered by the Press to the most popular lady in Crittenden and Livingston counties will be awarded the winner in the popularity contest.

The prize has been on exhibition at Boston, Walker & Co's, for several weeks. The set consists of a handsome sideboard, an elegantly finished table, and six nice chairs. The set of furniture retails at seventy-five dollars. If you don't believe it is a worthy prize call and see it.

Every dollar paid as subscription to the Press entitles you to four votes.

According to the last count the vote stands as follows:

Miss Maggie Franks	102
Miss Edwina Davis	92
Mrs. E. M. Duvall	92
Miss Sallie Summers	60
Mrs. Lillie Flannery	58
Mrs. Owen Boaz	46

FORMAL TRANSFER

Of Alexander Telephone Lines to the Independent Company.

Fifty Thousand Dollars Reported as the Price Paid.

[Paducah Register.]

At a conference held last evening between General Manager Ashbrook and other interested parties in the Independent Telephone company and President Alexander of the Alexander lines, the papers were drawn up, signed, sealed and delivered for transference completely of the latter system to the Independent company here. Plans for consummation of the Alexander lines by the local company were completed several weeks ago and at last night's conference the virtual transfer was made and this morning General Manager Ashbrook and the others will take full charge of the acquisition, that is one of the largest systems in Western Kentucky, connecting numerous cities between here and Madisonville with their long distance wires. In purchasing the Alexander lines the independent company pays Mr. Alexander the handsome sum of $50,000, while he will remain with the consolidated company.

NOT OUT OF POLITICS.

Hon. Chas. K. Wheeler, of Paducah, will leave Friday for Washington to serve his last session in Congress as representative from the First District of Kentucky. Next year he will give way to his successor, Hon. Ollie James, of Marion, and returning to this city will devote himself to the practice of law, it being understood, however, that he will be a candidate to succeed Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn in the United States Senate when the term of that notable Kentuckian expires.—Paducah Democrat.

BANQUET

Given by Officers of Court and Attorneys of Marion Bar In Honor of Judge Nunn

A NOTABLE GATHERING AT THE FESTAL BOARD.

The members of the Marion bar and officers of the circuit court tendered Judge Thomas J. Nunn, the present circuit Judge and Judge elect of the court of Appeals, a banquet at the New Marion hotel Thursday night. So long and so intimately have the members of the bar been associated with Judge Nunn as an attorney, as a Judge, and in a social way, that it was a befitting close, for the present, at least, of his long and splendid career, as a lawyer and Judge at this place—the county of his nativity. Gathered around the festal board, besides the honored guest, were ex-congressman John K. Hendrick and Hon. W. I. Clark, of Smithland; Mr. Leiber, of Louisville; congressman elect O. M. James, A. C. Moore, J. W. Blue, Judge J. A. Moore, John A. Moore, Carl Henderson, J. B. Kevil, Wm. H. Clark, C. S. Nunn, J. B. Champion, Thos. Champion, P. C. Stephens, H. A. Haynes, Col. D. C. Roberts, Chastain Haynes, P. S. Maxwell, R. C. Walker.

Something more than an hour was spent in the discussion of this menu:

Chicken Salad,
Turkey, Cranberries, Ham,
Oysters, Celery, Olives,
French Rolls, Coffee,
Orange Punch, Reception Flakes,
Ice, Fruits,
Roquefort Cheese, Tea,
Cigars.

At the conclusion of the feast Mr. Toastmaster Blue proposed the following in his inimitable style and for another hour there was a flow of intellectual beverage:

John K. Hendrick—The Lawyer Thirty Years Ago. The incidents connected with the speaker, Judge Nunn, L. H. James and Rev. J. W. Bigham, who were all members of the Marion bar thirty years ago, were full of humor and pathos, and his congratulations of Judge Nunn upon his deserved success was the climax of the brilliant address.

W. I. Clark—Lawyer and Judge; their Relations to the Public. The speaker's epitome of the physical, mental and moral qualifications necessary for the Judiciary were bright and charming.

O. M. James—Our Retiring Judge. The speaker said, among other things, that he regarded Judge Nunn as one of the greatest, if not the greatest trial Judge in Kentucky; that one of his characteristics was his tact for getting conflicting attorneys to compromise; he paid a high compliment to Judge Nunn in befitting story and graceful illustration. At the conclusion of his address he offered a resolution, which was unanimously adopted by members of the bar.

Judge Nunn was called for and feelingly responded. He said that he appreciated more than he would ever be able to tell, the expressions of good will from those who knew him best; he said he was born in Crittenden county fifty years ago, and that he owed more to the people of this county than any other people on earth; that all he could say about his work was that he had done his best. One thing he prided himself on was that he was leaving the circuit court bench without the ill will of a single lawyer in the district. He had gotten along pleasantly with every member of the bar. "Send me up good cases," he said, "cases that ought to be reversed, and I will reverse them for you; send me up good cases, cases that should be sustained, and I will sustain them for you."

A. C. Moore was called for and responded with a good story, illustrating how he and O. M. James had nonplussed circuit clerk Haynes, and stating that this was the only instance on record wherein the clerk had ever been outwitted.

Mr. Haynes was called for and the applause that followed. He said that he now notified the two gentlemen that his court was still in session and would be until that incident was rightly closed.

Whereas, Judge Thomas J. Nunn, who has for a number of years, been our circuit judge in this judicial district, has been elevated by his countrymen to the highest position in the Judiciary of this Commonwealth, and will on the first day of January, 1903, become a member of the court of last appeal from this Appellate Court district; and

Whereas, He has made the Fourth Judicial district such an able, wise, erudite and incorruptible official, who in the fiercest and most tangled litigation, has risen to the loftiest heights of an upright Judge; always courteous to the officials of his court and litigants, and all those with whom he came in contact; stern, yet kind; steadfast and immutable; one who has justly held the scale and walked upon the mountain range of law, which has earned for him the deserved appellation of the upright Chancellor; and, as he doffs the spotless robe he has so faithfully and honorably worn, to wear the ermine of the Judge of the court of Appeals, we confidently and cheerfully predict for him a career as illustrious as any who have preceded him in the long line of Kentucky's great Judges. Therefore, be it

Resolved, by the members of the Marion Bar, That we extend to him our great appreciation of his services and record as our Judge, and hope for him all achievement and happiness in his new field of duty; and be it further

Resolved, That we have these resolutions spread upon the Order Book of the Crittenden Circuit Court.

YOUTSEY'S DENIAL.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 29.—Henry E. Youtsey made a statement today in which he says: "No document from me is in the hands of the prosecution in the Goebel case. I have never been called to the witness stand, but I have been so abused that I feel now that I should be willing to tell what I know about that affair, no matter which side called me."

His statement has created a sensation.

BRIDGE NEEDED.

A bridge is badly needed at White Lick, one mile below Montezuma, over Tradewater. A section of county, is cut off on one side by the creek and on the other by the river, and the only way they can get to market is to pay for a ferry. It will have to be built by Webster and Crittenden counties and the right kind of a bridge will cost $5,000.—Providence Enterprise.

A house and two acres of land, at the Barmby mines, well and young orchard. Price $150. A good home for miner. See Bourland & Walker.

pany as a director and stockholder.

Mr. Alexander arrived here yesterday morning and returns to Madisonville this morning. Monday morning next he will be met at Madisonville by Mr. Ashbrook, who will then be carried over the entire system, purchased from the former and a transfer of all the offices made. This will take about a week to effect.

In this connection it can be stated that in a few days some action will be taken by the merchants and professional men of this city regarding the service upon which they asked the two competing lines to make them prices. The Independent company submitted figures but the Cumberland people wrote from Nashville that their rates will remain the same.

END OF SIZZLING SAM.

Sizzling Sam was a sterner end.
A terror for men to shun;
He loved to waste in human gore
And he shed it just for fun.
With his gun in hand he was full of sand,
He swaggered about in a most grand;
There wasn't one in the Texas town
Who was game enough to call him down.

Sam'd load up on transfer juice
And meander forth to kill
He had a private ponyard which
He bragged he was going to fill.
Other had men ran when the fun began—
There wasn't a stayer in all the clan—
For the bush they'd like like frightened deer
And keep mighty scarce while Sam was near.

There came one day to the Texas town
A youth with cunning air,
Whose tourist legs were glossy, and
Who hissed his blonde hair.
This dainty young man went about to seek
The sights of the town, and very soon ran
Against the greatest of all ker-sham—
The apparition of Sizzling Sam.

Commotion then arose forthwith—
There ensued a wild affair—
A pulseless form lay stark and still
And nobody seemed to care.
And the lifeless clay nobly here away
To the burying ground of Sam that day
Was torn and twisted all out of shape
And was not even a rag of escape.

Sizzling Sam was a gone galoot;
With eager haste they planted him—
Not a single soul was sad
The effeminate youth who had done the trick
Was a pig-pug player and lightning quick;
And Sam, while trying his moves to check,
Got badly tangled and broke his neck—

EXTENUATING CIRCUMSTANCES.

BY HORACE WENDHAM.

It was a quarter to 12 on Saturday night—a time when, standing as one does on the threshold of a new week, it is only appropriate that new resolutions should be formed. This, at any rate, was Phyllida's view of the matter, and no Saturday within my memory had ever been permitted to join its predecessors until she had solemnly registered a determination to lead a "higher and more purposeful life" for the future. From previous experience I knew that I should be pressed into subscribing to similar protestations. It was, therefore, with no feeling of surprise worthy of the name that I heard my departure prohibited, as, on the date in question, I made a strategic movement, hat in hand, towards the door.

"You mustn't go yet," observed Phyllida, laying a detaining hand on my arm.

"But my train will," I protested.

"Never mind that—you can catch another."

I resigned myself to the inevitable and sat down again. The pause that followed was broken by my companion.

"I called you back because you have forgotten something," she remarked, insinuatingly.

"I don't think so—my overcoat is in the hall, and I've got your letters for the post all right."

"It is something more important than letters," returned Phyllida, "guess."

"Parcels?"

"No—nor telegrams, either. You know perfectly well what you've omitted to do. I'm not going to give you the opportunity of making another silly remark, though, so I'll tell you at once—you haven't made any good resolutions for next week yet."

"Quite so—I'm afraid it slipped my memory. Have you noticed how the wind is rising? I see that the weather man says—"

"Yes—it will probably be fine if it doesn't rain," broke in Phyllida. "I don't think we need talk about the weather, though."

"It is unpenkable," I agreed.

"Then perhaps you will give me your attention for a few minutes. Do you know what day this is?"

I consulted my note book. "It is the 15th of the month."

"Yes, and it is also Saturday evening," returned my companion in a demure if you can voice. "In a quarter of an hour or so we shall enter on a new week. I should like to know, therefore, what your resolutions for its proper observance are?"

"I think, Phyllida," I remarked, diplomatically, "that it would be as well if you would mention the more conspicuous of my moral lapses."

"It is a time for self-examination," she replied, severely. "Still, perhaps it would be better if I did as you suggest."

I am afraid that Phyllida misread the expression with which I received this remark.

"You needn't look so relieved," she continued. "I'm only going to tell you your faults because I don't believe I should get the truth out of you."

"That is not the way to invite confidence," I replied, with dignity. "A moment ago I was more than ready to reveal the inmost workings of my mind to you. As it is—well—"

Phyllida arose from her seat and crossed over to my side. Looking at the matter impartially I cannot regard her subsequent action as being strictly in accordance with the dictates of propriety. It was, however, distinctly tranquilizing—and then, there were no spectators.

"Very well," I observed, as she returned to her own chair. "Ask me anything you like."

"Now, you're nice again," she answered, smiling. "You can't think how attractive it makes you. Well, what I want you to do is to describe all the girls you have fallen in love with since last Monday."

"All of them?" I echoed, disconcerted at the unexpectedness of the demand.

Phyllida nodded acquiescence.

"I'm afraid I shall have to go in ten minutes," I replied, looking at my watch.

"I suppose that means you couldn't exhaust the list before 12 o'clock," she answered, sadly. "I'm disappointed in you—and after all your solemn promises, too."

"I have no wish to deprive you of any legitimate grievances," I returned, "but you wrong me in thinking—"

"Then you haven't—er—you know—with anyone?"

"Precisely."

"O, I'm so glad," she exclaimed, brightly. "I knew I could trust you. You can't think what a weight you've taken off my mind, though. Do you know," she added, softly, "I think I admire your frankness more than anything else."

"I hope, Phyllida," I answered, proudly, "that you will always find me meriting your good opinion in this respect. Such experiments as from time to time I have conducted in the matter have ever convinced me that a rigid adherence to truth is the more excellent way."

"One should scorn to resort to falsehood from higher motives than those of mere policy," retorted Phyllida, severely. "Isn't there a proverb about it?"

"I have heard it said that a lie in time saves nine," I observed.

"Don't be frivolous, or I shall think you're not serious in your promise to be frank with me. Besides, I've got another question to ask you. It's this. I don't want you to mention any names, of course—but have you seen any girl whom you liked much during the last week? Now, be candid. Examine yourself thoroughly."

I complied with the request. In fact, I did so with such completeness that my companion thought it necessary to repeat the question.

"I have given the matter my attention," I returned, at length, "and find that I have only erred and strayed in one single instance."

"Ha!" exclaimed my inquisitor, sharply. "So you admit that you've been misbehaving, do you?"

"Don't make me regret my confidence," I pleaded. "I was not wholly to blame, I assure you. The incident occurred some time ago—three days at least."

"It's inexcusable," was the stern retort. "I declare, you're not to be trusted out of sight for more than an hour or two at a time. You didn't go the length of proposing matrimony to the lady who was fortunate enough to win your—er—regard, though, I suppose?"

"Certainly not, Phyllida," I replied. "Your question surprises me."

"Well, I'm glad to find it's not so bad as I thought," she went on, unheedingly. "I don't suppose you had time to get tender enough for that, though?"

"I only saw her for five minutes or so," I explained. "Upon my honor, Phyllida, you have no cause for alarm on my account. I assure you that nothing beyond a hasty kiss passed between us."

"The self-appointed guardian of my morals sprang to her feet."

"What?" she exclaimed—"you—you kissed her?"

"Only once," I answered, soothingly. "You must consider, I hadn't been introduced to her very long."

"O, this is too much!"

"My own, you asked for frankness," I observed.

"Yes, but not for callousness, too. O, how could you—how could you?"

"You will excuse my seeming density, but your question does not convey much to me. How could I what?"

Phyllida's lips shaped themselves to answer; her tongue, however, rebelled at the words. I leaned forward, inquiringly.

"Yes," I repeated, encouragingly.

"You wanted to know how I could—"

"K—k—kiss her? Yes."

"My own, it was quite easy," I answered, reassuringly.

"What?" was the indignant response. "You actually boast of it. Why, you must be brazen!"

"Not at all," I returned, stung by the unworthy insinuation. "I am pained that you should condemn me unheard. You do not know all the circumstances."

"What ones?"

"The—er—extenuating ones."

"I don't believe there were any."

"Pardon me, there were several."

"Tell me one of them, then."

"Well, the lady didn't object."

"Then she was brazen, too. I knew it! You were both of you equally guilty."

"This was overstepping the bounds of ordinary acquaintanceship. Something was due to myself, too. In a moment I had resolved upon my course of action."

"I cannot permit you to asperse an innocent lady who is not here to defend herself," I observed. "The blame, if any, was entirely mine."

"Ah, you only say that because you're a man," returned Phyllida, obviously softening a little.

"It is the truth," I asserted, proudly. "Never shall it be said of me that I stood by and saw the character of a woman assailed in her absence without raising a voice in her defense."

"Rubbish!" was the indeignant retort. "She's a designing mump. I'm sure—and a cut, too! So there! I expect, though," she added in another tone, "if only the truth were known—she led you on."

"Well," I admitted, reflectively, "her behavior might certainly be considered—er—er—encouraging."

"There! I was sure of it all the time," cried Phyllida, triumphantly. "Tell me, now, what did she do?"

"My dear," I expostulated, "you really oughtn't to ask me such things."

"Why, was it so bad as all that?"

"I am afraid I must have unconsciously nodded an affirmative. Phyllida came to my side."

"You poor old thing," she whispered, softly. "Did she put her arms around your neck like this when she kissed you?"

"This time I nodded purposely."

"O, the mump!"

"Don't condemn her unheard," I pleaded.

"You dear, good-natured old goose," said Phyllida, gently, "it's only your generosity that makes you find excuses for her."

"But she was young," I urged.

"Young, indeed! It's—quite old enough to know better, I'm sure."

"Indeed, Phyllida, don't think this was the case."

"Well, how old was she?"

"O, I don't know exactly—it's not considered polite to ask a lady her age, you know."

"Well, you seem to have got on such intimate terms with her that I should have thought you would have asked her anything."

"I did ask her mother," I admitted.

"Ah—well, that's something," returned Phyllida, in a decidedly more satisfied tone. "Tell me, though," she continued, "did you ask on the day that she made this disgraceful exhibition of herself?"

"Meaning?"

"I, you know perfectly well—the day when she kissed you?"

"Well, how old was she, then?"

"I don't think I ought to tell you, Phyllida. Consider how you would like it."

"But I want to know such a lot."

"How much?" I demanded sternly.

"Very much, indeed—please."

"All right, then—but promise you'll never tell her."

"Of course, I won't—now."

"You don't want to know any more, do you?" I asked, anxiously, as I made room for her in the chair beside me.

"O, don't be aggravating. If you still care for me at all—and don't want me to withdraw my forgiveness—tell me at once how old that brazen girl was when she kissed you?"

"Put your hand nearer."

Phyllida inclined a shell-like ear to a suitable proximity.

"Just two years," I whispered into it.—Chicago Tribune.

The Largest Cave in Europe

In the Moutathal, near Schwyz, Switzerland, there is probably the largest cave in Europe. The existence of the cave has long been known, but as it could only be entered by crawling no one had ventured to investigate the interior. This summer, however, three separate parties have explored it. The distance traversed amounts altogether to no less than 8,000 yards, and the end of the cavern has not yet been reached.

Many tinplate mills in this country which were idle during the summer have been started up, giving employment to a large number of men.

Gen. Toral, the man in command of the Spanish troops at Santiago and who surrendered to the Americans in the late Spanish-American war, has become a raving maniac, and is now confined in an asylum. In his mad ravings Toral declares the success of American troops due to Sagasta, former premier of Spain.

The Pennsylvania mine workers, through their representatives, have agreed with the mine owners to attempt to adjust the differences existing between them outside the anthracite coal commission. The proposition was made on a compromise basis and negotiations, it is said, will be entered upon at once, with a reasonable hope of settlement with the aid of the arbitrators. The rough proposition which is to form the basis of negotiations is a 10 per cent increase in wages, a nine-hour day and trade agreements between the miners and the company by which they are employed.

The annual report of A. R. Servey, chief examiner of the civil service commission, shows that during the last fiscal year there were 460, 538 people examined in and for the classified service, of whom 10,509 passed and 13,385 were appointed, promoted or transferred. In addition 1,171 persons were examined for the Philippine service, of whom 480 passed and 691 failed. The great complexity of the work done under the direction of Chief Examiner Servey is shown by the large number of examinations which include the subjects of special, professional, scientific or technical character. Of these there were 208 examinations in which 8,257 persons took part. Well nigh every field of professional or scientific inquiry and research is represented in the variety of the examinations.

W. J. Campbell, who has arrived at San Francisco from Guatemala, brings additional details of the damage caused by the recent volcanic disturbances. In an interview Mr. Campbell said: "There is no clear idea yet of the loss of life resulting from the volcano's eruption, but from what I could gather before leaving the country, I believe that 5,000 natives have been killed. There was some talk at San Jose, too, of some of the refugees having been waylaid by robbers, but I saw no instance of this. In fact, I gathered very little about anything except the fact that I had been impoverished, and I took the first means of getting back to this country. I heard at San Jose that President Cabrera was trying to suppress the news, but he could not reasonably have expected to do anything like that, for the evidence of ruin was apparent to everybody. Some of the coffee fincas that have been nearly ruined were worth more than $1,000,000. The plantation of Albert James, which was wiped out of existence, had machinery upon it worth $300,000, all of which is destroyed. Some months ago James refused an offer of $1,500,000 for the finca. Agolpo Myers' finca, worth $750,000 in gold, was entirely ruined. Both of these fine places lay from 20 to 40 miles west of the volcano. The town of Quezaltenango is practically ruined, for the houses are cracked and broken down; the people are moving out and the neighborhood is covered with sand and ashes."

Within the next few weeks increases of the wages of their employees will be announced by various railroad companies that will, in round figures, swell the yearly income of the 650,000 men affected by at least $15,000,000, and probably by more than $20,000,000. A conservative estimate of the sum is $15,000,000.

President Mitchell, of the miners' union, was a witness for three days before the strike commission, during which he was subject to a most trying cross-examination by attorneys of the coal companies, on questions in the contract between the union and the management of the mines. Mitchell claims that he proved by his testimony every contention made by the union.

Of the twelve large exhibit palaces to be erected on the world's fair grounds there remain but three for which the contracts are yet to be let. They are the transportation, horticulture and agriculture buildings.

Of the buildings now under construction, three of the largest—the liberal arts, varied industries and electricity—are under roof and so near to completion that the tracks constructed for the handling of heavy material to them are being torn up.

Astonishing revolutions of great loss of life and property caused by the eruption of the Santa Maria volcano in Guatemala are being made daily. Eruptions continue. Many hundreds of human beings perished and the destruction of property is considered greater than that in the island of Martinique by the eruptions of Mont Pelée. All the estates in the neighborhood of the volcano are buried under volcanic ashes which reach to the tops of houses. The richest coffee estates are completely ruined.

Archbishop Ireland has declared himself in favor of the army campaign at army posts. "It will be a grand thing," said the archbishop, "if we could persuade every man in the United States army to become a total abstainer, but until we can accomplish that and we must face the conditions as they are. Experience has proved that the lesser evil consists in permitting the soldiers a certain latitude within the army posts. By so doing we make them happy and contented and prevent infections of discipline and decorations. It is the lesser of the two evils."

ALASKAN FORESTS.

Some Huge Trees Grow in Our Great Northern Territory.

"If I were to tell you that in far-off Alaska, whose resources are just becoming known, there is an extensive forest in which are found mammoth trees from six to eight feet in diameter and 200 feet in height you would question my veracity," said an official of the interior department the other day to a Washington Star reporter. "Nevertheless, that is the fact," he added. "President Roosevelt recently created a forest reserve, embracing most of the islands of the Alexander archipelago, lying on the southeast coast of Alaska. These islands, mountains in character, extend along the coast for about 200 miles, and from the coast to their outer limits about 60 miles. It is a fact that practically every foot of soil is covered with dense, vegetable life, trees of mammoth size growing abundantly from the coast clear up the mountains to their summits of 2,000 or 2,500 feet. Practically all of the valuable timber of Alaska is concentrated in this group of islands, and has been for little time."

"People generally have a misconception of climatic conditions in Alaska, especially in the southern part of the islands. It is a matter of record that on the Alexander archipelago there is an annual rainfall of 100 inches, most of the moisture descending in the form of a gentle mist, keeping the soil constantly damp. The warm damp current runs in close, moderate, the temperature. Snow is practically unknown, yet a few females upon the mainland the winters are severe. There the effects of the Japan current are but little felt. The forests of the archipelago were recently studied by an officer of the navy department sent for that purpose. He reported that only the spruce and hemlock reach the proportions I have given you, although yellow cedar, a most valuable wood, often reaches a diameter of three or four feet. The smaller trees are the alder, cottonwood, poplar, maple, willow and red cedar. No doubt when the timber supply of the United States becomes depleted, as it certainly will at the present rate of cutting, the virgin forests of Alaska will make a valuable contribution to the nation's supply. The president was fortunate in reserving this rich spot before its presence became known to timber speculators and before the land of man worked devastation throughout its length and breadth."

LESSON IN AMERICAN HISTORY IN PUZZLE

MARQUETTE TEACHING THE INDIANS. Find Father Dablon.

Father Jacques Marquette began his labors among the Indians at Sault Ste. Marie. This was in 1668, and he continued his work along Lake Superior, Lake Huron and Georgian Bay until May, 1673, when he and Father Dablon and a number of followers left Mackinac Island in search of the Mississippi river of which they had heard. Following down the Fox and Wisconsin rivers they reached the Mississippi to the mouth of the Wisconsin on June 17. They explored the Mississippi to the mouth of the Arkansas. He returned to Green Bay and spent a year there. In 1675 he started for the great river again, but got only as far as the present site of Chicago for a time, though he later completed the journey. He returned to Lake Michigan, crossed to the east shore, and died there May 18, 1675.

AN ARCTIC ROMANCE.

Life Story of a Woman of the Most Northern Indian Tribe.

Mrs. Chris Somnicksen has left San Jose for Dawson City. She goes by way of Nome, and thence up the river to the northern El Dorado. The going of Mrs. Somnicksen, says the San Jose (Cal.) Mercury, was not chronicled in society events because she is a full-blooded Chugachin, the most northerly tribe of Indians on the American continent.

Mrs. Somnicksen was never south of the arctic circle until she married, and until one year ago she was never out of the land of the Midnight Sun in her whole 38 years of life.

Mrs. Somnicksen was born in the extreme northern end of the American continent. She had many times been to Siberia, had fished and hunted the seal and the walrus in the Kamchatkan sea, but never until she met Chris, Somnicksen, miner and fortune-seeker, who left Denmark many years ago, had she been as far south as the arctic circle. A year ago she came clear out of the land of cold and ice to the sunniest land on all the earth. She brought the body of her dead husband to Watsonville for burial. Afterward she took up her residence on Cimarron street, in San Jose, for the purpose of educating her children, who have been attending the Longfellow school for the past four terms.

Mrs. Somnicksen during her residence here learned English. It was 12 years ago that her husband left Watsonville, and San Jose for the north. He encountered the luck of all fortune-seekers until the gold strike on gravel claims was made at Dawson City. He was one of the original locators of a claim on Dominion creek, and when he died he left a fortune estimated at $200,000 to his squaw widow.

It was years previous to the Klondike excitement that Somnicksen met his wife. He was then trapping and prospecting in the very far north. A descendant of the Norsemen, latitude had no scares for him. He spent a winter at Point Barrow, and there began the courtship with the woman who bore him his children and is now managing his estate.

In the course of his career in the north Somnicksen became impressed with the idea that vegetables could be grown in the arctic regions. As a reward for his investigations, it may be said a large vegetable farm near Dawson City is among the most valuable assets of the widow.

Mrs. Somnicksen experienced no difficulty with the California climate. She was hale and hearty throughout her residence there, and never for a moment complained of her change of latitude. She expects to return next year, and will then become a permanent resident. She leaves her two children, who are attending school.

AUTHORS' EXPLANATIONS.

Sometimes Write Passages They Themelves Cannot Afterward Expound.

Two curious literary anecdotes may be found in Lord Nelson's pages, says the London Chronicle. One tells us that Keble's famous wedding hymn, "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden," was written as a protest against the divorce act. The other states that the "angel faces" of Newman's famous hymn refer to "some visions in his youth which used to rejoice his heart." There is a tradition that Newman in his old age was asked what he had meant by the lines in question, and explained that no doubt he had meant something in particular, but that he had quite forgotten what it was. When a similar question was put to Browning he is said to have referred the inquirer to the Browning society, who could tell him all about it.

Some Göttingen students who had a keen admiration for Klopstock—the German Milton—found one of his stanzas unintelligible, and begged him to explain its exact meaning to them. The poet read the stanza—then carefully reread it—then read it again, while all looked on with bated breath. At last he spoke: "I cannot recollect what I meant when I wrote it, but I do remember that it was one of the finest things I ever wrote, and you cannot do better than to devote your lives to the discovery of its meaning." This was pretty good for a modest man, but the finest repartee of the kind is that attributed to old Jacob Boehme, the shoemaker and mystic. Certain disciples came to him on his deathbed, imploring him to expound a difficult passage of crucial importance in his philosophical system. "My dear children," began Boehme, after wrestling in spirit for a time, "when I wrote this I understood its meaning, and no doubt the omniscient God did. He may still remember its meaning, but I have forgotten."

THE WORLD'S RICHEST MAN.

Alleged Treasures of San Francisco Hermit Cause Trouble in England.

At Sheffield James Albert Marson, generally known as "the Sheffield millionaire," was charged with forgery, obtaining money by false pretenses, and perjury, says the London Mail.

The evidence related largely to the story which appeared in a weekly newspaper entitled: "The Coming Richest Man in the World—A True Story That Reads Like a Romance," and of which Marson was said to be the hero. The article was read in court and caused much amusement.

The article stated: "Great excitement now prevails within the private circles of a family living in a central manufacturing town situated in the Midlands. A young fellow named Albert Marson, who fills the position of clerk, will in a few months be announced as the richest man in the world."

The facts connected with the affair were declared to be "strangely romantic and full of interest." The testator, eccentric and a hermit in San Francisco, was described; also how for 16 years after his death the will was wrongfully kept secret until an old servant, suspicious, commenced investigations which continued for the space of six years. These led to the discovery of the rightful heir. Then ensued a description of the hermit's mansion. There was a trapdoor, which on being opened showed a manhole, which in turn revealed a flight of well-worn steps. Then a passage and then a room, the shelves of which groaned beneath the weight of ingots of gold. There was also machinery for the conversion of gold dust into ingots.

Then came another room, more passages, and a massive iron door bearing a gold plate with the following inscription:

"This door is so constructed that if forced open the person or persons passing it by such means are liable to death. The key is to be obtained from S— bank, and can only be given up to the English gentleman authorized by their government to receive it, and to be unlocked in the presence of the chief governors of San Francisco."

The key was produced, the necessary precautions observed, and the door opened. Behind the door was a bridge, and beneath the bridge a pit filled with water. "Passing over the death-trap the party found the surroundings to be a gold mine, an examination of which proved it to be of countless worth."

The heir to this countless wealth (continued the article) is still scratching with his pen, but the queen has already intimated her intention of making him a peer of the realm as soon as the world is publicly acquainted with the information here recorded.

Joseph Frederick Brown, fish salesman, who lived next door to Marson, stated that on Marson's assurance that the story was perfectly true and that he was the man referred to, he lent him numerous small sums, amounting in all to £422. He had been repaid about £90. He had also received a check for £5,000, but had returned it to Marson to be reindorsed and had not seen it again.

Marson had told him that he (the witness) and a number of other friends were to be introduced to her majesty and subsequently to the prince of Wales.

The case was adjourned, Marson being released on bail.

AUTHOR'S BAD HANDWRITING.

Greatly Helped the Actor Who Took the Pains to Decipher It.

The bad handwriting of one dramatist has had an important effect on the fate of his play, says Leslie's Monthly. James M. Barrie, the novelist, sent his comedy of "The Professor's Love Story" in manuscript to Sir Henry Irving, who studied out the almost illegible writing and liked the play, but thought it was not suited to the Lyceum theater. So he sent it to John Hare with a recommending note, praising the piece and advising him to take a part so eminently suited to him. But Mr. Hare was less patient than Sir Henry and would not take the time to decipher the writing. So in turn he forwarded the manuscript to Edward S. Wilard, whose labor was rewarded with a drama so successful that it is still the most popular piece in his repertory.

Women prompters have been tried at the Berlin theaters with success, as it has been found that their voices carry better across the stage and are less audible to the auditorium.

COSTLY WOODS FOR FUEL.

What One Factory Did When Coal Was Scarce and Dear.

People have turned to everything for fuel during the coal famine brought on by the recent strike, but it is doubtful, says the Boston Transcript, if the furnaces of more than one factory are fed by costly imported woods, where every ton burned means a value of about $20 to $40 gone up in smoke.

The one firm in question is located in Cambridgeport. Its engineers have found that hard woods like ebony, rosewood, box wood and lignum-vitae, well seasoned, burn almost as well as coal. The only precaution which they take is not to burn coal and wood at the same time. They stoke their fires with $40 wood fuel part of the time, and with scarcely less expensive coal fuel the rest of the time.

On the face of it it may look as if the concern's managers are throwing away (or burning up) good money, but with them it is a plain business proposition. As one of them explained the other morning, they have unusual storage room, and for many years have been constantly in the market to buy. During the course of this time they have picked up a large amount of wood at extremely low prices. When, for instance, the National Mahogany and Cedar company was formed of several of the most prominent New York and Boston wood concerns, the individual firms composing them had a general selling out of stock, and when the same trust disintegrated a short time later, there was another sale—and at both of these the Cambridgeport company profited in good wood at reduced prices. So if fine hard wood worth $40 a ton cost them less than $10 a ton, they can afford to use it under their boilers rather than buy bituminous coal at very nearly that price or anthracite coal at half as much again.

PERSIMMON AS A FRUIT.

Not as Highly Regarded in America as It Ought to Be.

Why is it the persimmon is not more highly regarded as a fruit? True, it is difficult to get it at just the right stage to avoid the "pucker," but well-ripened and frosted fruit most persons would surely consider delicious, and worth a little trouble to produce. Possibly, says Melan's monthly, it is because the ripe fruit is difficult to handle. What is known as the Japanese persimmon is more encouraging to grow than our native ones in respect to the size of the fruit, being fully twice as large. But it will not thrive further north than Philadelphia, and even there it is uncertain. The flavor is a little less sweet, but with less "pucker."

Of late attention has been given to the improvement of our native persimmon, and it has been attended by more or less success. Some are almost or entirely seedless, and absence of most of the puckering is noticeable. One promising variety has been named Gold Drop, for which is claimed earliness coming into bearing, extreme hardiness, unusually large and good shape, fine yellow color, flesh melting and with but little pucker when ripe.

The American persimmon makes a handsome tree ornamentally considered. It has dark, green leaves that remain on late in the fall.

GREATER LONDON'S CENSUS.

Population Now 6,500,000—Its Growth Threatened by Falling Birth Rate.

Recent county council statistics show the population of Greater London to be 6,581,372.

A note of alarm has been sounded because, notwithstanding that the marriage rate has steadily increased since 1894, the birth rate has reached the lowest point ever touched. Thirty years ago the birth rate was 35.4 in the thousand. Now it has sunk to 29.3. Throughout England the full birth rate has been on parallel lines.

The death rate in London shows a slight increase over the three previous years.

Both pauperism and crime show a tendency to decrease.

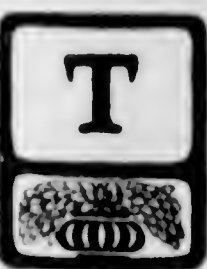

The board of trade report shows that there were fewer strikes in 1901 than for several years. There were 642 new disputes, involving 180,000 work people. About two per cent. of the industrial population were concerned, and the time lost was computed to be equal to 4,000,000 working days, about 22 days for every one affected. The majority of the disputes ended rather in favor of the masters than of the men.

Biggest Part of Them.

Some men's littleness is by far the largest part of them.—Chicago Daily News.

The United States and Tropical Agriculture

By HON. JAMES WILSON, Secretary of Agriculture.

THE acquisition of tropical territory by the United States has made it important and necessary that our agricultural department become thoroughly familiar with the agricultural conditions prevailing in these lands, and their possibilities in crop production. (1) for the purpose of supporting the present population; (2) for supporting the population which will result from the new and changed conditions; and (3) for bringing in revenue from outside sources. The United States pays out millions of dollars annually for tropical products WHICH WE OUGHT TO GROW, AND WHICH WE CAN GROW without interfering in any way with well-established industries. Coffee, rubber, bananas, cacao, and many other tropical crops not hitherto grown by us can now be produced, and attention has been turned to the best methods of succeeding with such crops.

It is evident that for many years the department will have to keep in close touch with whatever work may be inaugurated in these outlying lands; hence, experiment stations established there must be organized as to be an integral part of the department. In order to do this the stations should be put in charge of men from the department who are familiar with existing conditions and whose knowledge will render them strong supporters of the department's work. This policy has already been carried out in the case of the stations established in Hawaii and Porto Rico.

The improvements in the coffee industry of Porto Rico are an example of what has already been accomplished in this direction. Among the agricultural imports of the United States, coffee is second only to sugar, our annual importations averaging $70,000,000, and only a small fraction of one per cent. of this quantity comes from our tropical islands. The most important industry of Porto Rico, however, is the raising of coffee for European markets; hence, it has received early attention in our investigations of tropical agriculture. It has been found that the Porto Rican coffee plantations are seriously injured by being too heavily shaded, and also that shade is not, as commonly believed, a necessity, the supposed good effects resulting from it consisting simply in the fixation of nitrogen in the soil by the root tubercles of the leguminous trees used for shade. The other advantages of shade are only indirect, consisting in the protection of the soil from heat, drought and erosion. Rational moderation in the use of shade, the raising of seedlings in nurseries, and other practical cultural improvements would double or triple the island's output of coffee, and with the increase of acreage readily possible for this crop THE ISLAND COULD BE MADE TO PRODUCE MORE THAN HALF OF THE COFFEE CONSUMED IN THE UNITED STATES.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

FOR REPRESENTATIVE.
We are authorized to announce
T. EVERETT BUTLER
a candidate for Representative from Crittenden and Livingston counties in the next General Assembly of Kentucky, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

Gen. Lew Wallace, author of "Ben Hur," is dangerously ill.

The situation probably demands that the grand juries of the State indict the Democratic State committee for calling a primary election to nominate candidates for State offices.

The Louisville Post of Tuesday has a fresh piece of news concerning our railroad. Under a Madisonville date line it published, verbatim, the item the Press had last week. They all know where to find the news, and when they find it in the Press they know its reliable.

Millionaire Schwab announces that wealth is not without its drawbacks. That it is harder for men of wealth to find rest than men of moderate means. "Honesty's essence is religion," he says and he might have remarked that if honesty's essence flavored all business transactions, even those of great proportions, there would be fewer men of great wealth and more of moderate means.

The exportation of cattle, sheep and hogs from a number of New England States, has been prohibited by the National authorities. The animals have been found suffering from a disease of the mouth and foot to an alarming extent, and should the malady spread west of the Hudson it will become a national calamity, says Secretary Wilson, and he is afraid that the situation will be taken as a pretext by Germany and other European countries to shut out American meats.

Gov. Beckham has been asked by a number of members of the Legislature to call an extra session of that body to regulate the Louisville Tobacco exchange. The exchange probably needs its neck twisted a little, but the next regular session is not so far in the future but what it can attend to that job; besides, it would be better taste for the people, rather than the legislature, to petition for an extra session.

A petition has been circulated in all important towns along the Ohio river, asking congress to make an appropriation for improving that stream. The deepening of the channel so as to make the stream navigable for large steamers at all seasons is designed. The business interests of more than 13,000 people would be materially improved by a work of this kind, and it ranks in importance with the greatest internal improvements ever undertaken in this country. It will come sooner or later.

When men or newspapers calling themselves Democrats raise a great hue and cry because a Democratic committee calls a primary election to nominate candidates for office, there is evidently some disease in the body politic. Some mistake might be made or some wrong might be done in formulating the rules of a primary, but if a primary, affording every sovereign voter, high or low, an opportunity to express his device, is undemocratic, we confess that the ideas we have so long entertained about Democracy are erroneous and nothing short of regeneration will set us right.

Hon. Harry McChesney, Superintendent of Public Instruction, was in town yesterday. Mr. McChesney is one of the most efficient and popular officers the Commonwealth has. He is a candidate for Secretary of State and should win. Clean, able and fearless in the discharge of duty, he is a credit to his party and the State.

The closing session of the fifty-seventh Congress opened Monday. The question of admitting to statehood the territories of Oklahoma, New Mexico and Arizona, is one of the measures to be passed upon at this session. At the last session this bill, known as the Omnibus bill, passed the House and is now before the Senate. A strong effort will be made to emasculate the bill so as to obtain a vote for the admission of Oklahoma as a separate proposition. This would defeat the admission of New Mexico and Arizona, both of which would elect Democratic Senators. Oklahoma is Republican.

The work of the entire destruction of the use of silver as a money metal goes bravely on. All countries, great and small, are being pressed in that direction. This pressure is not, however, the result of natural laws, no more so than is the city ordinance providing for butchers' license, a natural law. It is an enactment of man and not a provision of nature. As the elimination of silver as a money metal gives rise for a demand for something else to take its place, the person or persons, syndicate or syndicates, that control the article that might be or must be used in place of the dismantled commodity, are benefitted to the extent of the value that is taken from and given to the other article. Hence the interest of those who are situated so as to be able to supply this demand. Whenever we notice that this country or that has shut out silver, we know the work is moving on.

GOOD ROADS.

The good roads for this part of our commonwealth are a thing of the past for the next six months. Now if we had the pike from Salem to Marion what a great blessing it would be to all classes.

There is no part of Kentucky where a pike could be built as one from Salem to Marion. Two-thirds of the way the rock would be to haul from one hundred yards to half a mile. It would not only enhance the price of every acre of land within five miles of the road, but would give employment to every one that wants to work, besides scattering a good amount of money among our people.

Yes, let us have the road. All it needs is a start in the right direction. Look at the town of Salem! Two years ago it was a dead town. Look at it today! Everything on a substantial boom, the town full of people, the streets crowded with wagons, and every other kind of vehicle. All we are in need of now is a good road; it can be built; all we need is the men with the right kind of grit to push it along. We have the men if we can get them interested in the matter.

THE LATEST.

The President's message was sent to Congress Tuesday.

Much damage was done by storms in the South.

The coinage at the three government mints during the fiscal year aggregated 191,419,506 pieces valued at $94,526,687.

A fire at Henderson at 6:30 o'clock Sunday morning caused losses estimated at $80,000. The Pierson Dry Goods company and the grocery firm of James L. Lambert & Sons were the principal losers.

The Rev. W. H. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the Senate, has tendered his resignation, and it will be placed before the Senate. Ill health is the cause of his resignation.

POINTS FROM THE MESSAGE.

The President's message went to Congress Tuesday. It is a lengthy document. The following paragraphs indicate his ideas on important subjects:

Congratulated the country on its prosperity.

Corporations, and especially combinations of corporations, should be managed under public regulations, the question trust regulation should stand apart from tariff revision.

Reciprocity treaties are greatly to be desired.

The tariff on anthracite coal should be removed.

Banks are the natural servants of commerce, and upon them should be placed, as far as practicable, the burden of furnishing and maintaining a circulation adequate to supply the needs of commerce.

It is earnestly hoped that a Secretary of Commerce may be created with a seat in the cabinet.

Both kinds of Federation, capitalist and labor, can do much good, and as a necessary corollary they can both do evil. Each must refrain from arbitrary or tyrannous interference with the rights of others.

Hopkinson to submit to the Senate a reciprocity treaty with Cuba.

Wherever possible, arbitration or similar method should be employed in lieu of war to settle difficulties with civilized nations.

The construction of an isthmian canal, if possible at Panama, should be carried out as a continuing policy without regard as to change of administration.

The government of Porto Rico has been so wisely administered that it serves as an example of all that is best in insular administration.

On July 4th last, on the one hundred and twenty-sixth anniversary of the declaration of our independence, peace and amnesty were promulgated in the Philippine Islands. Some trouble has since from time to time threatened with the Mohammedan Moros, but with the late insurrectionary Filipinos the war has entirely ceased.

There should be no halt in the work of building up the navy, providing every year additional fighting craft.

The receipts of the Post-office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, amounted to $121,848,047.26, an increase of $10,216,553.87 over the preceding year, the largest increase known in the history of the postal service.

Nationally-aided irrigation for the arid regions of the west is important.

It is not to our credit as a nation that Alaska, which has been ours for thirty-five years, should still have as poor a system of laws as it is.

In dealing with the Indians our aim should be their ultimate absorption into the body of our people.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Adjourned Saturday After Two Weeks Session.

ALLIE SISCO'S DEPOSITION TAKEN.

Circuit court adjourned Saturday afternoon. A great many cases on the civil docket were continued.

In the suit of A. H. Cardin vs. Illinois Central railroad a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. Mr. Cardin had a mule killed by a train in June. He asked for $175 damages and was awarded same.

An appeal was asked for and granted the defendant in the case of Lanham against McConathy.

The attorneys for Geo M Sisco were given permission to take the deposition of Allie Sisco, the afflicted son of Geo M Sisco. Young Sisco's physician stated that he was in a dangerous condition and might die at any time.

The petit jury was discharged Saturday, and after making a number of orders the court adjourned.

MINING PERSONALS.

A recent analysis of a rather solid specimen of galena from the Senator mine returned 79 per cent of lead, 4 per cent of zinc and 29 ounces of silver, the latter being based on 12-100 of one per cent of the white metal.

Shipments of flour spar for the month of November will exceed 2,480,000 pounds.

Carbonate of zinc shipments will scarcely go above the monthly average of 120,000 pounds, the scarcity of cars preventing a larger tonnage.

In the Old Jim's East vein, the south breast of ore is showing from the bottom of the slope several feet of an almost solid zinc sulphide or Jack. This is the shipping sulphide ore and there are already some 120,000 pounds on the platform ready to be moved.

Mr. L. Haydon and associates, of Hopkinsville, began the sinking of a one hundred foot shaft on the Bibb lease, near Mexico, last week. Mr. Harris, an old Joplin man, has charge of the work. The vein carries lead, zinc and barytes, and in the old shaft showed a width of twenty feet. This ought to develop into a fine property.

At the last session of the General Assembly of Kentucky, Section 2739 A of the Kentucky Statutes was so amended as to require all persons or corporations operating mines in the State of Kentucky, on or before the 15th and 30th days of each month, to pay to within fifteen days of said 15th and 30th day of each month, respectively, the full amount of wages due each employee.

Most of our mining companies have but one pay day per month. In order to continue this course, which is more satisfactory to both the companies and the men employed, and to put the matter on a strictly legal basis the PRESS will furnish blanks, waiving this right on the employees part and requesting the one pay day to be continued as before. These blanks, with the name of the company and the date of the usual monthly settlement, with blank space for the employees signature, will be furnished at this office for one dollar per hundred.

Mrs. W. C. Tyner, who removed here last fall in order that her son Jesse might attend school has returned to her home in the New Salem neighborhood, owing to the continued ill health of her son.

"The James Boys" failed to fill their date here Tuesday night. Doubtless their finances were in a deplorable condition and an opportunity to hold up a train or break a bank did not present itself and consequently the daring outlaws went broke.

A SUCCESSFUL AFFAIR.

The school bazaar held Wednesday afternoon and evening was eminently successful in every way. The inclement weather made but little difference, for the school chapel was thronged with people until a late hour. The exhibition of Mrs. Jarley's waxworks was highly creditable and very entertaining. This feature received the largest patronage and was decidedly the most popular attraction. The country store, under the management of Miss Fannie Gray, did an enormous business. However, it can hardly be said that one feature was more liberally patronized than another, for every booth disposed of its stock early in the evening. The amount realized was $83.00.

Prof. Evans desires to thank the people of the city for their liberal patronage and support. He assures them that their loyalty to the school is appreciated by both the teachers and pupils. The proceeds go to the library.

IN TROUBLE AGAIN.

Maek Edwards, who was arrested on charge of forgery and obtaining money under false pretense from Mrs. Cameron in August, 1901, but was dismissed as it was clearly a case of mistaken identity, is in trouble again. He must answer a similar charge in the Todd county court, says the Madisonville Hustler. Edwards' home is at Morton's Gap. The Hustler states that it is thought that Edwards will have no trouble in convincing the authorities that he is the wrong man. At the same time Edwards was accused of swindling Mrs. Cameron he was also charged with working the same game at Guthrie.

The same man evidently did the work at Guthrie, Marion and Elkton. It is said that another man who lived in Christian county at one time, and is now a fugitive from justice, did the work, and his strong resemblance to Maek has caused him all the trouble of extricating himself from the clutches of the law and overcoming the positive identification of the parties who were swindled.

Lawyer—Well, my young friend, your Uncle Josh determined that you should be a farmer, or get nothing from him. He did not leave you a cent of money, but he willed you his plow, cultivator, mowing machine, thrasher, portable sawmill, stone crusher, road scraper and stump puller.

SAM WARD'S RECIPE.

It Made Terrapin Stew Famous the World Over.

Epitaph Pronounce It the greatest of culinary triumphs—Taste for the Terrapin an Acquired Taste.

There is no other like it. Terrapin time has come again. This delicacy of the rich and epicurean is becoming well known. Systematic cultivation alone has prevented the entire disappearance of the once numerous amphibians.

Terrapin farming, that is, the "planting" of terrapin is it would be known as oyster terminology is not by any means new. About twenty-five years ago a man of the name of Berlin established a terrapin pond just below Mobile where he kept young terrapin for growth, and where he claimed to be also raising terrapin from the egg. The report of the fish commission, however, denies that he had any breeding. The Berlin terrapin farm was destroyed by one of the terrible tail storms, and was never reestablished.

Every year there is a scare throughout the eastern country, particularly in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, over the lack, out of the disappearance of terrapin. Last year the report was spread at the beginning of the fall and winter season, and the wealthy were obliged to pay enormous prices. They were the more anxious to have terrapin at any price, because dealers and butchers winter might come and no terrapin would be served. The report again went all over this section late the past summer when the farmers and fishermen of Maryland and Virginia were impounding terrapin for the coming winter trade. All along the shores of Chesapeake Bay supplies of terrapin are being collected for the market of the immediate future. There are laws against impounding terrapin, but they are ignored.

Although there is no sale for terrapin until snow flies, which is about Christmas time, the farmers of the states contiguous to the bay are constantly on the look-out for stray terrapin, which they pick up and take home, where they hold them for the season. They do not fatten them. On the contrary they seldom feed them. Terrapin hibernates. When he has had his spring or summer feed he can be put in a pen or barn and left for two or three months. He will not die. A Baltimore dealer raised one in a box and left him there for three months, at the end of which time he claimed that the captive weighed one ounce more than he did when he was imprisoned. This story is one which is well verified, and there are other tales of terrapin longevity, which are regarded by some as of less credibility. Scientists all admit, however, that the terrapin is a hibernating amphibian.

In the neighborhood of Chincoteague island, near the eastern shore of Maryland, in Chesapeake Bay, there are several houses where from 200 to 1,000 terrapin are stored in straw in good seasons. They are very curious looking fellows of all sizes and are a sight to behold. Whenever the owner wants to display them he raps hard on the side of the house before opening the door. Each terrapin sticks his head out of the straw to see what the noise is about. They have very acute hearing and manifest great curiosity whenever any unusual noises are heard. Down south they are bred to destruction by this trait. A fisherman rowing over the mud banks raps on the side of his boat. Water carries the sound, and the terrapin comes to the surface to see what made that noise, and the fisherman very promptly satisfies the curiosity of the inquirer.

The officials of the fish commission do not believe that the terrapin will become extinct so long as systematic farming is carried on, but they believe that this industry should be increased very largely.

Washington and Lafayette, Cornwalls and Tarleton knew the quality of terrapin stew, but they ate it sometimes for want of something better, and not as a luxury. Terrapin stew was one of the hardships of their military environments occasionally. There was at one time a law in Maryland providing that a man should feed only so much terrapin to his slaves, for even the slaves rebelled against such a diet. And, for that matter, no civilized white man really likes terrapin when he first eats it, but acquires the taste because it is fashionable and expensive, and because everybody tells him what a grand luxury it will be when he becomes accustomed to it. All of which is true, for the taste once acquired is everlasting.

The farmers and fishermen along the bay shores are terrapin locusts. It was common to do so. The crop was so valuable that they would not take the trouble to gather any more than was sufficient for the use of their own families during the season. Naturally they would expect their slaves to take to the water and hunt for them. They were, of course, and endured all sorts of hardships and injustices, but when it came to terrapin for a steady diet they dared not do it. Consequently the law was enacted limiting the amount of that sort of food for the slaves. But, beginning with terrapin for the sake of economy, the white folks acquired the taste. Senator John M. Clayton, of Delaware, was very fond of terrapin. He usually bought an ox load of them for a dollar and had them shovelled into his cellar. His own people regarded his taste for terrapin as so peculiar that it became a tradition of his state until everybody began eating terrapin.

SAM WARD MAKING A STEW.

Although the negroes do not care for terrapin they are great hunters and cooks of the toothsome amphibian. They liked nothing better than to get away from plantation work and go hunting terrapin, and they are still so inclined. There was no commercial demand for terrapin previous to 1850. The waters of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina fairly swarmed with them. They were undomesticated except for home tables. But when the people of northern states began to acquire the taste the fishermen began bringing them to market. Then there was a system of southern hospitality, which was exceedingly showy. Relatives and other visitors from northern states were entertained lavishly, and they were given terrapin everywhere. They are regaled with stories of how to make the stew, and had it dinned into their ears until they went back north talking terrapin and nothing else.

Sam Ward, once known as the king of the lobby, was successful in all his schemes before congress primarily because he was such an unusually extravagant entertainer. He studied all of the epicurean artifice and was himself one of the best of cooks. His terrapin stew was famous, and he always either made it himself or personally supervised its making. Here is his recipe: "Immerse live terrapin in boiling water. Let it boil half an hour. Then take out, remove lower shell, carefully cutting out the meat. Take out gill bag without cutting or breaking, and throw it away. Remove liver and cut it into cubes. Remove meat from upper shell, disjoint and place in iron pot with the eniled liver and a pint of the liquor in which terrapin was boiled. Watch carefully and cook until tender. Serve in a sauce made of two ounces best butter, a pinch of flour, half pint cream, cayenne pepper and salt. On the bottom of each plate place a piece of bacon cooked crisp, so that it will easily break all to pieces."

It was with that recipe that Sam Ward captured the prince of Wales, and until this day King Edward has his terrapin stews in season, made on Sam Ward's recipe. Until the day of his death John Chamberlin, the famous restaurateur, served terrapin in the same way. After his death the rich and extravagant guests of his house said that they could not get any terrapin fit to eat there, and so John Chamberlin's famous place in this city has long been closed. It was literally built on terrapin.

Terrapin are found only in America. From Long Island sound to Texas they are to be found, and a very few have been taken on the Pacific coast. The terrapin of the northern waters receive the preference of epicures, because their flesh is more delicate. That is because they develop more slowly than the terrapin of the southern waters. The most prolific waters are those along the Virginia shore just below the mouth of the Potomac river. The terrapin of Maryland waters bring better prices than the Virginia because they are drier, but Virginia produces fully two-thirds of all the terrapin in the market. The diamond-back terrapin of Chesapeake Bay is the best of all, and therefore the most costly. And the most desirable diamond-back is the six-inch fellow. After them are the heifers and the bulls; the latter being cheapest and used in restaurants for terrapin soup, a very inferior imitation of the genuine stew of the tables of the rich.

Suppose you save your extra pennies, and have a terrapin stew instead of turkey for your next Christmas dinner?

A PASTOR WHO WAS REFRIGERATED BY AN EMPEROR SAVED BY PE-RU-NA.

Rev. H. Stuenkel, of Elkhorn, Wis., is pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran St. John's Church of that place. Rev. Stuenkel is the possessor of two bibles presented to him by Emperor William of Germany. I present the leaf of one of the bibles the Emperor has written in his own handwriting a text.

It is honored pastor, in a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, Ohio, says concerning their famous catarrh remedy, Peruna:

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.
Gentlemen:—I had hemorrhages of the lungs for a long time, and all despaired of me. I took Peruna and was cured. It gave me strength and courage, and made healthy, pure blood. It increased my weight, gave me a healthy color, and I feel well. It is the best medicine in the world. If everyone kept Peruna in the house it would save many from death every year.—H. STUENKEL.

Thousands of people have catarrh who would be surprised to know it, because it has been called some other name than catarrh. The fact is catarrh is catarrh wherever located; and another fact which is of equally great importance, is that Peruna cures catarrh wherever located.

FARMER AND PLANTER.

THE FARMER'S HARD LOT.

How the Biggest Field on the Farm May be Made to Give the Farmer Ample Returns.

About the biggest field on the farm, judging by the prominence given it, is the "farmer's hard lot." In fact, so vast and universal is it that few can not restrain it. It knows no county, state or national lines. It is coextensive with the world's domain. It is most in evidence during a close political campaign. The heart of men and women have been wrung, and the fountain of tears overflowed its highest banks, at the picture of the toil-worn farmer and his hapless wife and child. Even farmers themselves have turned from their well-filled bins and bins, their glossy, sleek-coated cattle, their pastures and cellars overflowing with good things to eat, and added their groans to that of the populace. For who will not conjure up injuries and abuses when he finds a willing ear? And what ear is so sympathetic as that of the politician seeking votes? Even among farmers who have secured a modest competence there is a feeling that farming is not a lucrative pursuit, that the returns are not at all commensurate with the time, thought and energy expended.

I have discussed the matter with many classes of minds and have asked for the basis of their opinions. In nearly all cases, the substance of the replies is that "the townsmen has a better house, beautiful within with artistic furnishings, and without with shrubs and vines. Poor indeed is the street that is not lined with shade-trees. Good walks surround his home. His house is heated by a furnace or with gas, and hot and cold water are always on tap." To which the reply is, and must be, "The advantages are only apparent. It would be well for you to spend fifteen minutes each day in getting acquainted with yourself. You say you are nothing for looks or show, but only solid, substantial comfort. The latter you profess not to have; the former you emphasize by pointing that in your enumeration of the advantages of town life. With patience, skill and careful planning the cottage of the early years may be added to, so the modern house, no matter how shrewd a buyer the wife is, the woman who occasionally goes up to the city has the advantage in taste and artistic living of one who does not.

The traveling woman, other things being equal, can make one hundred dollars go further in comfort, luxury and artistic effects than can the unfavored woman with $200. Spend a few dollars each year in getting away from home. As to trees and shrubs and vines, the farmer can have for the digging his choice from hundreds of plants, while the townsmen foregoes some pleasure to buy the nurseryman's choice of stock, which is inferior to that on the average farm. The shade trees of the street may be the farmer's, also, with this difference—they are far more luxuriant, healthy and well proportioned in the country than in the city. Farmer-heat in the country may be obtained for less than in the city, and poor indeed is the farm that does not get an abundance of water for the house. The occasional beautiful farm home you see was not built in a day. 'Twas the slow accretions of years and the mellowing, maturing influence of time. The truly beautiful farm home comes to the family imbued with a tender love for Nature, there is a tree, shrub, vine or flower too beautiful to be seen but once, its environments are noted, and the conditions at the house made as nearly similar as possible, then it is carefully removed to its new home. In its gratitude it sends out a plentiful supply of new beauty to gladden the eye. As time glides on, other plants are brought to bear its company, and soon the bare, unsightly house is made a bower of beauty and elegance. Men admire its beauty, and in time desire to buy it. Nothing can be made so genuinely lovely as the place planned and executed for the love of the work alone. Ah, my friend, spend the time you now give to fretful, childish repining in planning how to make your little place attractive, and in seeking better methods of doing your work, and you will find heaven right at your door." Farm and Fireside.

POULTRY POINTERS.
—Kerosene your roost, upper and under side, once a week.
—A hen in her best condition only when she is seen industriously at work.
—The scratching room is a necessity if the best results are to be had in winter.
—Excessive fatness leads to a suspension of egg production, and predisposes to certain kinds of disease.
—Do not allow your litter in coop to become damp during the rainy season. Fowls must have dry houses.
—One of the greatest drawbacks with new beginners is the attempt to crowd 50 fowls where there is only room for 25.
—A full egg basket, provided the basket be large enough, means plenty to eat and plenty to wear, along with some luxuries.
—The best way to manage a poultry business is to begin with a few hens; keep strict account, and if they are paying well increase by degrees.
—Beware of overfat, inactive hens; they are most certain to be a source of trouble and at best are unprofitable stock to keep either for layers or breeding stock.
—It is estimated that there will not be one-third as many turkeys to market this fall as is usually the case. This means a good price for other kinds of poultry.
—Any breed of fowls that is carefully and systematically bred for egg production can be made to produce good layers. But the individual specimens must be bred along the right line.
—Almost any kind of hens will lay in spring and early summer, yet there is a great difference in this respect. The nearer we can approach to summer conditions the more eggs we will get in winter.
—Remember that the waste from dressing a hen that weighs three pounds is as great as that from a better fitted one that weighs five or six pounds. Buyers have learned this and want well-fitted fowls.—Farmers' Home Journal.

SOIL EXHAUSTION.

What Prof. Whitney, of the Department of Agriculture, Has to Say on the Subject.

Prof. Whitney, chief of division of soils, United States department of agriculture, makes the following statement: "I have never in my experience seen a case in which one could say with any degree of certainty, or even probability, that exhaustion was due to the actual removal of plant food. It is perfectly safe to say that the condition of the so-called worn-out soils in the south is due not to an actual extraction of plant food, but to the chemical condition in which it now is, in which it is unavailable to plants, and that the restoration of the fertility of that land must be not necessarily in the addition of plant food to the soil, but in bringing about such changes in the physical condition or in the chemical combinations as will encourage that natural weathering of the soil which brings the plant food into a condition in which the plant can get its support."

The authority quoted is a high one, and his words have weight. He knows of no soil once fertile that has been cropped down to such a point that chemical analysis would not show the presence of great quantities of plant food. An unproductive condition of a field once fertile does not signify that plant food has been removed by cropping to the point of exhaustion, but that the physical condition of that field has been permitted to become bad, or that the plant food in the soil is permitted to rest in such chemical combinations that plants can not use it. A clear conception of this fact affects our farm methods if fertility were gone we should add all required to produce crops, where as if it is present we should seek to release it.

There is no better way of keeping land fertile than by feeding all crops upon it, because manure is fertility pretty quickly available, and we are less dependent upon the natural strength of the soil. More than this, the incorporation of manure with the soil furnishes both physical and chemical conditions, that enable the plant to use some of the original soil elements. But we have a class of writers who assume that this is the only rational way, regardless of the fact that the Creator must have intended that people eat something besides meat and milk, and that grains, vegetables and fruits must be taken away from the farms producing them. It that be true it is a narrow view that is taken by any one urging all to feed their farm products for the sake of the land's fertility. Other ways of maintaining it are open to us, and Prof. Whitney's statement indicates a leading one. Half of the fertility of the crops now fed on the farm fails to get back to the land through the manure on account of careless methods. This is wasteful, because the plant food in it is so readily available, but it is mentioned to show that many a stockman is far more dependent upon the natural strength of his land for plant food than he realizes, and that which he does in part, and often unknowingly, another may wholly do by keeping his soil in good physical condition through sods and fertilizing crops without any feeding upon the farm. The method is unsafe in careless hands, and a good supply of manure is the best key for unlocking additional soil fertility; but the chief need of farmers today is to recognize the importance of a good physical condition of the soil, and to regard it, rather than the amount of plant food they may be putting into the ground or taking out of it.—Farm and Fireside.

The Flood.
The blood is life. We derive from the blood life, power, beauty and reason, as the doctors have been saying from time immemorial. A healthy body, a fresh appearance, and generally all the abilities we possess depend on that source of life. It is, therefore, the duty of every sensible man to keep the blood as pure and normal as possible. Nature, in its infinite wisdom, has given us a thermometer indicating the state of the blood, which appears to our reason by giving notice of its impurity. Small eruptions of the skin, to which we scarcely pay any attention, headache, ringing noises in the ears, lassitude, sleeplessness, are generally a sign that the blood is not in normal state, but is filled with noxious substances. These symptoms deserve our full attention. If more attention were paid to these symptoms and steps taken to remove them, then many illnesses from which we suffer would become unknown, and the human body would become stronger and healthier. Attention, therefore, should be paid to those warning signs, and the blood can be purified and poisonous substances removed from it by the use of Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Drops, discovered more than 60 years ago.

WORK BEGINS

On the Tennessee Central Railroad at Hopkinsville.

Robt. Russell, contractor on the Hopkinsville end of the Tennessee Central railroad, pitched camp yesterday in R. H. Holland's field and is getting ready to begin work at once. Mr. Russell has 80 head of mules and drivers for them and his representative, G. D. Thompson, has been trying for several days to secure 100 hands, paying them $1, $1.25 a day. A good many have been secured and actual work is expected to begin today.

If anybody has entertained a doubt that the T. C. means business, he has only to use his eyes to be convinced that Hopkinsville is certain to have the road as soon as it can be built.—Hopkinsville Kentuckian.

STURGIS BOOMING.

There is great rejoicing at Sturgis over the discovery there Saturday afternoon of a four foot vein of Bell coking coal at a depth of 250 feet.

This discovery means the building at Sturgis of some 200 coke ovens and the employment of 800 to 1,000 men. The company will at once begin to sink the main shaft, and will operate in the meantime the 6x9 shaft just sunk in order to supply the Grand Rivers iron furnaces with the superior coke that the Bell coal makes.

It may be added that this discovery will probably mean great additions to the furnaces of the Kentucky Iron company, as it has all along been stated that the discovery of coking coal at Sturgis would mean rolling mills and steel mills at Paducah.

A GOOD MEETING.

I closed a good meeting on the third Sunday night in this month at Liberty church, in Lyon county. The meeting continued thirteen days; we had a glorious revival, 29 professions and 22 additions to the church, 18 baptisms, 3 approved for baptism and 1 restored with others to follow.

Rev. B. F. Hyde, of Christian county, did most of the preaching and did it well, to the entire satisfaction of the church and the large congregations. To say that brother Hyde is a strong preacher is putting it very mildly. He preaches the gospel plainly in the spirit and with power. To God be all the glory.

I commence a meeting at Hampton next Saturday night. Bro. Hyde is to assist me.

MRS. L. J. ALLISON DEAD.

Last night Mrs. L. J. Allison went to the A. O. U. W. hall to attend a meeting of the Degree of Honor lodge. While the initiatory ceremony was taking place she complained of being ill and was assisted to the reception room. She continued to grow worse and a short time after she was taken to her home in the First ward. The doctor and relatives did everything possible for her relief, but death had already fastened its grip upon her, and her spirit passed from this earth at 10:30 o'clock, heart disease being the immediate cause of death.

Mrs. Allison leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her loss, all of whom will unite with the Traveler in expressing heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband and family.

Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Allison were married April 18th, 1876. One child survives, Mrs. D. C. Allen. The funeral will be held tomorrow at 2 o'clock, from the residence, 208 North C street, with burial in Riverview cemetery.—Arkansas City, (Kan.) Traveler.

Mrs. Allison was well known in Crittenden county. She was a daughter of the late Mrs. Rebecca Grissom, and a sister of Mrs. Jas. Hughes of this city.
